WOMAN, 1870-1880

At the time of the Civil War, the woman's position in society was one of dependence. She was expected to manage the household and rear the children, while her husband was the primary breadwinner. The war, however, brought about significant changes in the role of women. As men went off to fight, women took on many of the responsibilities of men in the workforce, both in the home and in the public sphere. This period marked a turning point in the history of women's rights, as they began to demand equal treatment and opportunities.

Japan, China, India, and the Philippines are the principal sources of the supply of opium in the world.
The opium trade is a very important one in these countries, and the government of each country has a monopoly of the trade.
